

The Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington, DC 20554

Dear The Federal Communications Commission,

We are burdened by excessive government and taxation. Every time taxes are increased we lose another little piece of our freedom. Rather than working on a new tax or reworking an existing tax with the goal of collecting more revenue, let's work towards gradually eliminating that tax (without replacing it elsewhere). I want to stress gradually because I realize that many people rely on that tax revenue for work. Gradually these people, over time, will either retire or find other employment and then there is also the possibility of privatizing those services deemed necessary. This is not about radical change, but gradual change; gradual change in the direction of preserving our freedom.

cc: Marlene Dortch, Secretary

Sincerely,

John Aviste
28556 NYS Route 342
Black River, New York 13612